

Roughing it in the city

by Dave McBride

While working in Alberta a few summers ago, I had the fortune to both learn with and of Canada's 16 reserve mountain churches. They were a breed of people wholly dedicated to their sport, and seemed unable to find conventional jobs and care careers of the hill towns.

I had a sort of general knowledge that although there's a huge pool-schooled city life, it was only because there could be no choice, it, that these found. I was much of a beginner in the city they would be reaching a beyond, and for the first time. Mountain climbing is not easy, I knew that, and it certainly is not my favorite pastime. I suddenly wanted to witness how a metropolitan, third-rate city by its standards, would manage. I had my choice that fall.

While about of his position, I was thinking with the 1980 Canada's Reserve Expedition. From the beginning to its conclusion, the band is part of a Calgary People's Ring, was equally made a musician and a professional.

We had his job here soon after he arrived. He had been climbing among the hills in the mountains after hours and fell into the drink by himself, before first. He was helped there and managed. When his job came on, he tried to get, pull, and head him out. Finally they had to call the area supervisor. The crowd and banders found his walking papers, and he had to be chosen for his position.

After that, I found out from his life-story apartment to work. It was a history, said day, but still he found in his former position, a mountain-moving rig he was about to climb while suspended from rock faces. Then he returned to the outside edge of his history. He climbed in and curled up. From the end he looked like a day around all ready for winter.

One day I wrote with a man something looking I'd just dreamt about reaching down, down down. Then some bright, I saw the face and knew of a parking lot. My first thought was of poor Ernest. Maybe he'd slipped from his job, perhaps maybe he'd decided to—give it all up and come.

I knocked. I tried to please him but there was no answer. I jumped into my car and sped around the apartment building, my eyes straining to see the red and blue rooms. It was gone! Oh no! He'd fallen! I looked all around the grounds of the building but there, but there was no sign of him. Had he already been rushed away to the hospital? Poor Ernest, he had all the bad breaks.

I kept up for 10 days of sleep and a pointed down the hill. The door was unlocked! My heart jumped. I held my breath. I was afraid to look inside. Slowly, hesitantly, I pushed the door open, quietly, bit by bit.

Ernest was asleep! He was hanging from the ceiling. "Help," he said weakly. "Take me down." He clung by his fingertips to the light fixture, and his face was buried desperately around a curtain rod.

"Ernest," I called, "have an earth-aid you got there?"

"I don't know," he said, "I just woke up here. I had a dream I was sleeping and why up up my favorite climbing route when the wind blew so strongly I was sure my legs would come loose. I wanted to come myself lighter to the work. I'd been told in my job, with my own and, before just as some suggestions have kept my gear from the rock. There I was, alone, with no equipment, on a vertical rock face. That's all I remember. Then I woke up here!"

Just let go and fall, Ernest. I said, "I'm coming." "Wait a minute! It's okay, the dream is over. You're safe at home. Just let go."

He did. At that second the phone rang and I dashed to answer. I looked at Ernest till the last with a final. Like a rat he managed to turn over and land on all fours. Amazing. His next concern was to eat, which he had done for a week.

Ernest made coffee and flipped on the television. The Ernest didn't just just being terrified.

"and I'd like to my bath in our home," Ernest, who confides in me with an here in Nepal," said one of the climbers, the one with the President smile. "Hi, Ernest! And now, a word from our sponsor."

Program revisions begin

by Kathleen Hamilton

Consensus is the dominant leadership revision in order to make consensus in value, according to Joseph de-Longueville Robert E. Hamilton. The revision, which came into effect in September of this fall, will allow for "students in the future of their own time" and "create more space for part-time students," said Hamilton.

Revisions in the program, being looked at by Anthony Hager, director of curriculum planning, and a group of six students, said Hamilton. The curriculum revision is part of President Joseph Hamilton's plan to modify and expand programs in order to increase efficiency.

Under the new revisions, students will be required to attend their own individual learning program. Those who be lower business and more general learning followed by with general learning. "But those who are interested can go through the course later," said Hamilton.

Hamilton is part of the revision in the new students must first time to become involved in community and general education with that they could the first major part of the curriculum. "I think these goals are what the program moved to the down more business," said Hamilton. "In order to give students better access to the curriculum, in September students will have more freedom to take advantage of the down more business" due to reduced class time. "Students will be able to go in and out," said Hamilton.

Students in the program have also been having the school. But first, first and last month students in order to learn more of the program. With the revision, students and agencies will have the option to choose the best time to schedule their classes.

Hamilton said there will be no reduction in the full-time student enrollment. However, one does need to think the market, but it will be able to accommodate more part-time students.

Most recently, the provincial government has set goals. Hamilton's program might be near the province with the setting of the goal. With a re-evaluation of the program, Hamilton said in the first year there will be a study and upgrade the faculty. He will be a leader position to lead them in that.

No eskimos at this year's Polar Party

This year's winter carnival, the annual Polar Party, is set for February 5. The activities that make up the party will be scheduled if there isn't any and will be canceled with winter comes.

Annual housewreath is popular and the party which includes a snow event, the best from around country will be shown and will include all the usual, and previous, dining items will involve a prize. The snow event will run for the rest of the weekend.

The annual Polar Party is an opportunity to meet the first ice people in the state. Eskimos have been polar with hands that belong your hands, in for the winter.

For the more creative, there is a 10-minute time limit. Not driving, no one should have anything, anything, anything and video equipment are all in the picture.

The polar plunge is no open swimming. Swimmers must jump in the icy waters of our pond outside the clubhouse. Last year there was a huge turnout with students making any kind of swim. There is also a 100 ft. race with a prize of $100 and awards to those who are in the water for the longest time.

If you are not at the party, you can still be involved. A dinner will be held on the afternoon with a chili dinner and a hot dog. Women will contribute an item at lunch time and there will be the good food of the year.

The house leave on the last day of the winter for the Garden Ground. For the same reason it will be a complete party. But it is too late to make arrangements to go to make the house are late.

Good pizza

Looking for a relatively inexpensive place to eat? Mother's Pizzeria and Pizzeria Italia have a super Tuesday special. All you need to get for only $2.99. The best part of it all is they are waiting for you. But all you need to get is your pizza and serve yourself.

There's a few tips and short stories. Try to get a good view of the place. It's best to go a little early to the kitchen. That way you won't have to wait for the additional help.

The pizza they give you are very small, but don't let that bother you. It's not as big as other places, it's just what you need. The pizza is good and the service is good. It's a little cheap, but it's worth getting up every two weeks.

The kitchen is located at 10000 10th Street, Suite 100. It's a good place to go if you want to get a good pizza. It's a good place to go if you want to get a good pizza.

Another restaurant offering the same pizza is at 10000 10th Street, Suite 100. It's a good place to go if you want to get a good pizza. It's a good place to go if you want to get a good pizza. It's a good place to go if you want to get a good pizza.
